He proposed a three-point policy for dealing with "the Communist orchestra of subversion."

The United States should promote the social, economic and political evolution within he Communist bloc, including 'all measures calculated to pring to the peoples of the Communist world an under-tanding of what the Free World has to offer," he said.

The U.S. should carry on rade with the bloc, he said, emembering always that "we annot trust them to give up heir desire and their purpose o undermine us . . . They will not compromise."

Secondly, he said, the United States should "contribute in every way towards the disintegration of the once monolithic Communist movement" that is exemplified by Peiping's break with Moscow.

And finally, said Dulles, "we should equip ourselves to deal effectively with the major present weapon in the arsenal of communism, its wars of liberations, of revolution and of socialism directed particularly against the weaker members of the free world."

Dulles, a member of the seven-man commission invesitgating the assassination of President Kennedy, was introduced by Gov. Farris Bryant, The governor called him "a man whose life is a romance."
